IN THE DAYS OF JOHN MARSHALL

REMINISCENT STORY OF THE GREAT CHIEF JUSTICE.

SIMPLE HOME LIFE

Devoted to His Wife, Whom He Married in Youth, After She Had Once Discarded Him. Survived Her Four Years.

The recent protest, as of one voice, from the educational, patriotic and historical organizations of Richmond against any iconoclastic action in regard to the home of Chief Justice Marshall, encourages the hope that marshair, encourages the hope that measures may be taken to preserve in perpetuity the priceless relic.

In a country born scarcely more than 300 years ago, and not admitted into the family of nations until 176 years afterwards, the sum total of such remains must be small. We can ill afford, through recklessness, indifference, or a lack of appreciation of afford, through recklessness, indif-ference, or a lack of appreciation of historic values to lose one of them; and in a very special sense is this true of what is associated with one of the nation's builders—a man conspicuous in strengthening the foundations of the government under which we live.

The Marshall family, of English origin, collaterally descended from the great Earl Pembroke, the wise Gover-nor of the young king Henry III, date: in America about 1650, a singular cir cumstance being that the eldest so in America about 1650, a singular circumstance being that the eldest son in each generation was alternately John or Thomas. They became large landholders, and the chief justice's father, Colonel Thomas Marshail—the friend and schoolmate of Washi, ston and his associate in the survey of he Fairfax estate—left to each grandson named Thomas a thousand acres, his distinguished son bequeathing to his namesakes in the same degree a similar legacy. Some of this land, parted with for a song in the disorganization following the Civil War, was in West Virginia, and being later acquired by Senator Davis, of that State, was sold by him at immense figures. The chief justice's mother was Mary Keith, a granddaughter of William Keith, Earl Mareschall of Scotland, and a daughter of Rev. James Keith, an Episcopal clergyman, from whom Judge James Keith, President of the Virginia Court of Appeals, is also directly descended.

In his role of soldier, lawyer, statesman, diplomat, and judge, Marshall illustrates Carlyle's theory that distinction, in every department, springs from the same qualities. In the soil of his character, too, flourished the domestic virtues: and it is with memories.

7:00 a.m. his character, too, flourished the do-mestic virtues; and it is with memories of these that the Marshall house is 10:30 a.m. 11:00 a.m.

The Marshall house stood in its day in the court end of Richmond, and fort to find her husband, who left the circle into which he introduced his bride must have been exceptionally charming. A few of the old homes still serve as dwellings, as that of the reconciliation.

A recent instance of the latter fate was the University School of Medi-cine, which sprang from the site of the residence of Mrs. Marsinal's Mary Cary, famous from having discarded Washington, the great-great uncle, Edward Ambler, who marriaunt of Constance Cary Harison, the novelist, and some of whose linea descendants, as the rector of Haly Trinity Church, and Senator Gravatt f Caroline county, now live in Rich-nord, while another great-grandson, Sishop Gravatt, of West Virginia, is well known here.

trom expansition just outside the city, he was discovered by two negro men and carried home in their arms.

From the Lime of her death he wore, concealed, suspended from his neck by a mourning chain, a jecket containing a piece of the hard. Just before going for medical advice to Philadelphia his daughter rep'aced the old chain with a new one, and the locket, cherished by his granddaughters, the Misses Harvie, was lying on his breast when the end came. He died in Philadelphia July 5, 1835, his remains being brought to Richmond, when, despite a heavy rain, crowds gathered in and about his home to take part in the services and accompany them to their last resting-place beside his wife.

More than a hundred years have passed since the great Chief Justice, occupying, for the nonce, the office in its rear, watched the walls of his future home rise brick by brick, or wandered with his young wife through the unfinished rooms. Since then Richmond has lightly parted with much that differentiated it from cities of mushroom growth that gave to it interest and distinction, and was, indeed, its glory and its pride. But the Marshall House remains, coming to us of this generation, not simply as a heritage, but as a responsibility and a trust. Let us be worthy of it.

GILBERTA, S. WHITTLE. matter one of very grave doubt. Publicly, the friends of the bill claim they will carry the day in the House; privately, they admit the situation is very much mixed.

The provision of the bill giving OLEOMARGARINE American registry to foreign-built ships which may be purchased by Americans, is giving offense to shipbuilders of the country, who have been most benefited by the law, which does not allow any but vessels built in this country to fix the American Senator Penrose Would Increase does not allow any but vessels built in this country to fly the American flag. None but vessels of this character are allowed to engage in trade between ports of the United States, and the proposed change of the law does not give foreign-built vessels of American registry the right to engage in the coastwise trade. It is difficult to see that the proposed law would render more benefit than simply to grant the sentimental privilege of flying the Stars and Stripes.

Senator Lassiter, of Petersburg has offered a bill which. If adopted, means the end of releasing the "criminal insane" when they shall be acquitted of responsibility of crime by reason of insanity.

The bill is along the line of the New York iaw, and under which Harry K. Thaw, the slayer of Stanford M. White, is now detained in Matteawan Hospital for the Criminal insane, and the same practice would obtain in Virginia.

The bill provides that the white criminal insane shall be confined in the Southwestern State Hospital at Marion, and the colored criminal insane at Petersburg.

To carry out thees views, the bill provides that special quarters shall be provided at Marion, the Southwestern State Hospital, and that for colored criminal insane are to be detained at the Central State Hospital at Petersburg. to remain on as long as possible.
